

A new way to understand health

Studies show the biggest influence on individual health isn't clinical care, it's social determinants of health (SDoH) such as food availability, access to transportation and housing stability. Yet these factors aren't consistently captured in standard EHRs.

With the move toward value-based care, it's time for clinicians and rev cycle professionals to work together to evolve how we understand the patient experience.

Turning data into insights

Social determinants connect patients' clinical and financial experiences and influence their decisions as healthcare consumers. By digging into data at the population and individual levels, our technology provides a more fully realized understanding of your patient's background to help you provide better health outcomes and lower costs.

With our solution, you can evaluate SDoH risk before a patient even meets with a member of your team, without prior clinical or claim information. Powered by predictive analytics, our tools can expand your view of social determinants to reveal previously unknown patient risks.

By recognizing the importance of—and gaining visibility into—non-clinical drivers of health, providers can develop care plans that better address these upstream factors. Proactive SDoH insight can help enhance risk segmentation and offer support services to those who need them most, ultimately improving resource allocation and paving the way for financial success in value-based care.
